Aims and Scope

The Journal of Pathology is a journal of the Pathological Society of Great Britain and Ireland. From January 1984, it has incorporated the other affiliated journal, Diagnostic Histopathology. The new group of Editors intend that the journal shall reflect the interests of the members of the Society. This will be no easy task since they cover the whole range of experimental and diagnostic histopathology.

High quality papers, written in English and dealing with descriptive histopathology will be welcome. Papers dealing with new techniques and those that elucidate the mechanisms underlying disease processes and histopathological appearance will be particularly encouraged. Single case reports will be accepted only when they are of exceptional interest with important new information and which contain a full, but concise, review of the literature. Good photo-micrographs are of particular value and interest to histopathologists and emphasis will be placed on the quality of the illustrations.

Original articles in the field of experimental pathology, relevant to human disease, will be welcome. Review articles dealing with general and experimental pathology, as well as diagnostic histopathology, will be solicited. Unsolicited reviews will also be accepted if they are clearly written and topical. Editorials, a letter column and reviews of recently published books will form regular features of the Journal. Meetings abstracts of the Pathological Society of Great Britain and Ireland will be published as they become available and the annual CL Oakley Lecture will continue to be included. Symposia proceedings may be published if the Editors consider them appropriate and relevant. The Editors wish to maintain the minimum delay between manuscript submission, decision and publication, and authors are therefore requested to follow the instructions for manuscript preparation as set out in the Notes for Contributors which are printed on the inside back cover.
